

Irregular Verbs

Pronunciation of some verbs, like read and dream, changes different from what would be expected from the spelling. In this list of irregular verbs phonetic transcription of these verbs is given, using the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA).

Some verbs have two possible forms for past or past participle. When separated by a slash, both forms are used equally. When one is placed between brackets, that form is less common. Remember though that preferences and rules like this, change over time and from region to region.

Modal verbs

Modal verbs are included in this list because for instance could and would are the past of can and will respectively although they are often presented as independent modal verbs. A confusing aspect of modal verbs is that the past of a modal verb can have a very different meaning or is used in a very different way than its present form. Modal verbs don't have a past participle. Must doesn't even have a past form. For these reasons they are marked (modal).

Phonetic transcription in this verb list

In this list a narrower IPA transcription is used than in most dictionaries, because many learners of English have difficulty with the pronunciation of for instance the letter 'r' in English. Writing read and dream as [r̥ɪd] and [d̥r̥ɪm] instead of /rɪd/ and /drɪm/ can help them overcome this problem. It shows that, in English, the letter 'r' is pronounced different from how it is pronounced in many other languages.
